

Default password for network security devices

Article Overview

Network security devices often come with factory default usernames and passwords, which should be changed immediately to secure the device.

Common Default Credentials

Many network devices use standard default usernames and passwords for initial setup. Examples include:

- Cisco routers and switches: Username cisco, Password cisco or sometimes blank .
- Netgear devices: Username admin, Password password (newer models may require changing the password during setup), .
- Ubiquiti UniFi devices: Default credentials work only before adoption; after adoption, a random password is applied. Factory reset is required if credentials are lost .
- Industrial RTUs and older devices: Username manager, Password manager or blank .
- Dell iDRAC interfaces: Often root / calvin for initial login .
