

Price of a set of indoor electrical distribution boxes

Article Overview

Indoor electrical distribution boxes are priced based on type, material, protection rating, number of circuits, and additional features, with typical residential units ranging from $10 to $40 and industrial or smart units costing more.

Key Factors Affecting Price

1. Type and Application

- Residential boxes are smaller, simpler, and usually cost between $10 and $25 for plastic units, or around $40 for steel boxes .
 - Industrial boxes have higher load capacity, more circuits, and may include advanced features, making them more expensive .
 - Smart or intelligent boxes with monitoring and control functions command premium prices due to integrated electronics .
- #### 2. Material
- Plastic (ABS, polycarbonate): Lightweight, economical, suitable for basic indoor use .
 - Steel or aluminum: Stronger, more durable, often used in industrial settings; stainless steel adds corrosion resistance but increases cost .
- #### 3. Protection Rating (IP Rating)
- Indoor boxes typically require lower IP ratings (IP20-IP44), which are less expensive than high-rated outdoor enclosures .
 - Higher protection grades (IP65 or above) increase cost due to better seals and precision manufacturing .
- #### 4. Number of Circuits and Voltage Capacity...
